The wrong secret can poison everything--even if it's kept with the best of intentions.

Cost of Repairs, Book 3

Gavin Perez knows he's a living cliché. He works a dead-end job, shares a trailer with his waitress mom, has an abusive, absentee sperm donor, and he's poor. So color him shocked when middle-class, white-bread Jace Ramsey agrees to hang out with him.

Granted, Gavin is trying to make up for dumping a bowl of cranberry sauce on Jace at Thanksgiving. And boy, is Gavin forgiven, over and over again...until Jace goes back to college for finals and stops returning Gavin's calls.

Back home from the semester from hell, Jace doesn't want to do anything but sleep through the holidays. It's easier than coming out to his family—or facing Gavin's hurt. But Gavin's ready forgiveness draws them back together, and Jace won't be able to stay in the closet much longer.

Nor will he be able to keep hiding his pain. He trusts Gavin with his body, maybe even with his heart. But can he trust that a devastating secret that's eating him up inside won't destroy everything—and everyone—he loves?

Warning: This book contains one slightly hyperactive hero from the wrong side of town, a frustrated college student looking for a little life experience, and an unexpected romance amid dark secrets that just won't stay buried. Also contains references to physical abuse some readers may find disturbing.
