Skipping the stone-sonnets Erjan J. Slavin

This is a portrait of an inner place that is, in actuality, beyond words. The only way to make this place appear in the range of our common understanding as the reality that is in each of us is for an artist to auscultate upon it from different angles and circumstances. Again and again-in what seems to be an acceptance of the limitations on our sense-making and also an embrace of the actual capability of language-the poet touches on the same sure place in each sonnet in a process that he refers to as the skipping of a stone again and again on the same water.
